"Gracious me," Ollie Owl gasped with surprise as he paused in front of Henery's window while on his way to school one morning. "Henery's making faces at himself."

At that moment, Henery noticed Ollie watching him and opened the window. "I'm practicing for my part in the school play," he explained. "I have to look surprised in one place, and afraid in another place, but I just can't seem to do it."

"You'd be better off spending your time studying," Ollie hooted wisely. "If you fail the monthly test we're having Friday, you'll have to stay after school every day of the week next month. That's the penalty."

"Studying and going to rehearsals, too, is pretty hard, all right," Henery groaned.

"Well, I'll stop in at the auditorium after school today and watch you rehearse," Ollie promised. "Maybe I'll think of some way to help you with your acting problem."

And so, later in the afternoon, when Henery was waiting backstage to take his part in the play rehearsal, Ollie came rushing up to him all out of breath.

"Henery!" he exclaimed excitedly. "Guess what! The teacher says your work has been so good this month that you won't have to take the monthly test."

Henery's mouth fell open and his eyebrows shot towards the ceiling at this news. While he was still struggling to speak, Ollie held a small hand mirror in front of his face. "See?" he grinned triumphantly. "That's how you want to look when you have to act surprised in the play."

"Oh, Ollie," Henery laughed, "you really had me believing that tale about the test. But thanks for helping me to see what I look like when I'm surprised."

Later, when it was time for Henery to go home, Ollie appeared again. "Foghorn Leghorn is waiting for you outside!" he gasped. "He said he's going to beat you up!"

"You can't fool me a second time," Henery grinned. "Foghorn wouldn't dare try anything this close to school. You were just trying to make me look afraid."

In the days that followed, Ollie tried many different ways to get Henery to look afraid, but none of them worked. Henery only looked startled when Ollie yelled "boo" at him unexpectedly. He only looked angry when Ollie jumped at him from the shadows one night.

Friday arrived, and the children had their monthly test in the afternoon. That night, when the play was being performed, the director watched Henery with misgivings. But when the scene arrived where Henery was supposed to turn to the audience and act like he was afraid, the director stared with surprise. Henery was almost trembling with fright!

When the play was over, Ollie dashed backstage and found the director and Henery.

"How did you ever manage to act so afraid?" the director was asking.

"I can answer that," Ollie offered. "The one thing Henery's been worried about all week is that he'd fail his monthly test and have to pay the penalty of staying after school every day next month. When he turned to the audience in that last act, I held up a sign which read, 'You flunked!' and Henery turned as white as a sheet!

"But fear no more," Ollie snickered. "I checked with the teacher just before the play, and she said you passed all right!"

The sport a boy grows up with... Daisy®

shooting a Dad

"In training youngsters to play baseball, there is simply no substitute for practice. The same applies to shooting a Daisy B-B gun.

Practice makes you a better shooter. And when you start hitting bullseyes, it gives you a real sense of satisfaction. I know, because I've been hitting bullseyes with Daisy B-B guns for over 35 years.

Now I'm teaching my son Marc to shoot. Right from the start, he's developing coordination and skills that will help him in any sport. At the same time, he's gaining the confidence that will help him grow up to be the man he wants to be."
